

THE CIVIL SECURITY - MAIN ELEMENT FROM CONTEMPTED CROSS-BORDER COOPERATION

GEORGI TSOLOV,¹

Abstract: This report is based on the need for a detailed analysis of the concepts of non-militaristic security perceptions not only because of the changes in the structure of the international system but also because of internal transformations of national states that develop complex relationships with their citizens and neighbors and try to be placed in their service. Even objective economic processes such as: integration and convergence; building global economic links; regionalization and demographic trends are determinants that give rise to some methodological problems in defining the notion of security because they push in countries and transform the security sector as a key element in the structure of the traditional state and its relations with its neighbors.

Keywords: cross-border security; comprehensive security; asymmetric threats; regional economy, sustainability, civil liberties, entrepreneurship, market behavior, economic choice.
